Boeron.—At the Boston theatre, Mr. Forrest's engagement closed on Friday, to a house filled in every participing to a close a series of twenty nights, which have averaged about eight hundred dollars per night. At the conclusion of the performances Mr. Forrest was called before the curtain and spoke briefly as follows:—

Ladies and Gentlemen.—Fatigued in body and mind, I appear before you at your cell. The curtain has fallen upon the dramatic scene, and I stand before you as a man. I am tired, ladies and gouldence, in my mind, and too exhausted to any more than that the engagement which is now closing has been the most brilliant I ever played in Boston. I leave you with the hope that I may be able at some future time, in obedience to your call, to appear in those parts which you have so generoudly applauded. I thank you for your attention, and regretifully and respectifully take my leave.

"The Devil's Bridge' is the attraction. The Gazele says:

"It was in this part that Malibran, when in New York in 1827, retrieved her falling fortunes. The Italian Opera, with herself and family, under the direction of Gazela, her father, proved unattractive, and M. Malibran, her husband, having falled in business, ahe sought the astatance of Mr. Barry, then at the Fark theatre with Mr. Simpson. He suggested the attraction of English opera, and advised her to study Count Belino. The idea was adopted, and when it was announced that Malibran was studying the part, applications were daily made for tickets, and the prespective success was truly great. The next husband heaving of this took advantage of fit; and when Mr. Barry spoke to her about terms, he was somewhat surprised to hear her state that the lowest sum would be seven hundred dellars per night.
